Read the following passage , then answer the questions below:

John Logie Baird was born in Scotland on 14th August, 1888. When he was a boy, he was not very clever at school. His school reports all said that he had to work harder and that he could do better. This did not worry John. He was always experimenting and inventing things. One day he connected his house to four of his friends' houses with electric wires to make their own telephone system. Unfortunately, one of the wires hung too low and caused an accident. John was interested in engines and how things worked. He wanted to be an electrician.

John liked and was fascinated with the idea of sending moving pictures. He experimented for years. He failed many times but he did not give up. Between 1924 and 1927 he succeeded. He sent moving pictures from one place to another. He even sent them across the Atlantic Ocean from Scotland to America. John had invented television. The age of television was here.

Our life has changed since the television was invented. Some people think it made us lazy, others disagree. They think it helps us in many ways like entertainment, communication and education. This doesn't change the fact that it is a great invention.
